[BRG: Courses of Action

Appendix C: Courses of Action

Reflecting on the questions below can help you anticipate issues which may arise because of a disaster (some questions may not apply to all businesses). The answers you provide will help you determine what courses of action you may need to take to minimize disruption to your operations.

- Are there features of your business processes or building which would make it difficult to relocate temporarily to another location?
 - Can business operations be moved to another facility used by the business?
 - Is there a similar facility operated by another entity with which your business could establish a mutual aid agreement?
 - Can any work be temporarily outsourced?
 - Can production lines be adjusted or duplicated?
- If business functions are interdependent, what is the weakest link? How can functions be reinforced to reduce the likelihood of failure?
- Approximately how much raw material and finished product does your business have on hand, and can it be increased?
 - Would additional storage capacity be needed? Could it be sited in a different location to reduce the likelihood of both facilities being impacted by a disaster?
 - What elements (specific materials, equipment, etc.) would influence your ability to continue production, and can redundancies be introduced?
 - If the business has perishable stock, is back-up power available, or can perishable items be moved to another storage location?
 - Would it be possible to install a generator at your facility?
- Are shut down and startup plans for equipment, computer systems, or utility systems documented and clearly labeled?
 - Can equipment be repaired by employees?
 - Are there service or maintenance plans to use if equipment goes offline?
 - Can shutdown procedures be practiced as part of a drill or exercise?
- Does the business have a security system in case the facility is inaccessible after a disaster?
