

Situational Awareness

Today

The National Weather Service has marked a yellow X on our charts to keep us alert, only two weeks after the peak of Hurricane season!

The yellow-X marks the spot of a trough of low pressure associated with disorganized shower activity in the southeastern Gulf of Mexico. The system is expected to move west over the next day or two and is unlikely to develop into a tropical system. (Formation chances 10% in 2 days or 7 days.) By mid-week, the system is expected to face unfavorable environmental conditions that should end its chances for development.

The system is NOT a threat to our service area but the yellow scribbles remind us that the Hurricane season “ain’t over, ‘till it’s over!”

El Nino

NOAA announced that El Niño is anticipated to continue through the Northern Hemisphere winter (with greater than 95% chance through January - March 2024).

These are broad patterns but a strong El Nino is generally associated with a wetter and cooler Winter in our area.
